

A Rhinoceros used up. The New York Dispatch and Tattler gives the following account of a sudden death in that city:—

“On Tuesday quite an event occurred at the Zoological Exhibition, Bowery. The Rhinoceros and Elephant having come in contact by some means, the latter swung up his immense trunk, and struck the Rhinoceros such a violent blow in the abdomen, as to knock his breath entirely out of him. The animal thus assailed, did not survive the blow but a few minutes. He was valued at $15000.”
