

The Rhinoceros, now in Boston, is about 4 feet and a half in height, is only 15 months old, and weighs about 2000 pounds. He was obtained from the Rajah of Benares, about 600 miles distant from Calcutta, who parted with him reluctantly to an individual who brought him out. The well known natural antipathy between this beast and the Elephant was shown on the passage. There was an Elephant on board, which was sick, and he was taken from his place of confinement to move on deck—but as soon as the Rhinoceros scented him, he became furious and noisy, and the Elephant, cowed by his cries, retreated to his cage. It is stated that the latter is always killed or conquered by the Rhinoceros.—whose power is irresistible, both for attack and defence. It is clearly the greatest natural curiosity we have ever witnessed.
