

THE RHINOCEROS.—One of these huge animals has been shipped at Calcutta, in the Edinburgh castle, and is on its passage to this country. It is a very furious animal, stands eight feet high, and is about 11 feet long. It has been for several years in the possession of one of the Rajahs of India, who would only part with it on condition of having in exchange a full pack of English hounds, which were taken out last year. It has been insured for 1,500l., and is destined to take up his abode at the Surrey Zoological Gardens. There has not been an animal of this description in England for these fifteen years.

A noble Marquis, who takes great pains to convince the public that the cholera does not exist at Sunderland, appears to act in direct opposition to his professions. We are informed that, since the report of its prevalence, the residence of the noble Lord has been so strictly guarded that persons have been prohibited from approaching near the house.

RICH AND POOR.—It has been remarked, says an intelligent correspondent of one of the cheap weekly publications, that those who work for the poor on a large scale generally realise more than those who work for the rich on a small scale. The makers of common soap are wealthy men compared to those who manufacture scented soap. The distiller of gin is more important than the maker of liqueurs. The maker of cotton cloth is a great capitalist; the maker of linen is but in a small way. The maker of cotton stockings bears away the bell from him of the silk.

The Satirist, or, the Censor of the Times, London

27 NOV 1831 issue 37 p. 237