Four White Rhinos were seen wallowing in a muddy pan near main road. Earlier, two Leopard Tortoises had been seen mating near the rhinos. When we arrived at the sighting I noticed that the one rhino was rubbing his horn on what appeared to be a rock. Closer inspection revealed that the rock was in fact one of the hapless tortoises. Unfortunately for the Chelonian, the rubbing was so hard that from 50m we heard the shell cracking. Immediately, the tortoise stuck his legs and head out and 'ran' for cover
