"There seems no end to the human drama, to the variations of form and subject matter, from the realistic to highly expressionistic and even surreal types..."

The realistic carvings portray the life of the Makonde, in the village and in town, in all its manifold aspects — domestic life, toil and labour, illness and injury, childbirth and death, violence, satire, humour, ceremony, war...

... in highly dramatic and dynamic images, the Makonde artist expresses his fear of the unknown, ... the relationship between birth and death, of man and beast, man to spirit, to the demons of rocks, trees, the underworld..."
