

THE zoological mind of Calcutta is at present much exercised by the great rhinoceros problem. A public-spirited Raja has endowed the new Gardens with one of these massive beasts. But the sweet creature is wallowing in his tank four hundred miles off, and the difficulty is how to bring him to his new home. Two methods are suggested, the road and the rail. Accordingly, the question now stirring the Calcutta intellect to its depths is, "Whether to train or to march the rhinoceros?"

---

A New York correspondent writes: "The pres-