

SHIKAR IN INDIA

HUNTING BIG AND SMALL GAME

WITH GUN AND CAMERA

by the late Lieut.-Col. J. C. Fauntleroy, M.A., B.A.

It is interesting to speculate why so many quite bright leads used to enter Government service in India. In some cases the reason was a hobby. There were many families whose members served in India for generations...

It is interesting to speculate why so many quite bright leads used to enter Government service in India. In some cases the reason was a hobby. There were many families whose members served in India for generations...

THE ELEPHANT

The elephant is the largest of the extinct animals of India at present. He is everywhere in the British provinces and in the mountainous regions of the Indian States...

THE WILD DOG

Under the label "canivora" that interesting animal the wild dog should be mentioned. It is one of the most difficult to handle and most dangerous of the mammals of the Indian States...

BIRD LIFE

Small game includes many varieties. The Indian hare is a poor specimen. Perhaps the most sporting bird in the country which visits India from October to March...

THE LION

The larger carnivores are the lion, the tiger, the panther or leopard, and the cheetah or hunting leopard. It is very people are unaware that the Indian lion is now found only in the Gir Forest of Kathiawar, an interesting and somewhat remote tract...

THE TIGER

There are many fine spots in India. The Forest Divisional headquarters on Nepal give their supply of tigers replenished from the jungles of the Central Provinces...

THE LEOPARD

The leopard or panther is fairly plentiful in the open hills where there is suitable cover for his lair. Modern big game he can live on game, including partridges and jackals, and is frequently found hunting around villages and being on his guard, calves, and dogs. He does not mind whether he lives in the hills or in a sugar-cane field, or in the tannak jungle on the edge of a river...

THE LION

The lion is the largest of the extinct animals of India at present. He is everywhere in the British provinces and in the mountainous regions of the Indian States...

THE WILD DOG

Under the label "canivora" that interesting animal the wild dog should be mentioned. It is one of the most difficult to handle and most dangerous of the mammals of the Indian States...

BIRD LIFE

Small game includes many varieties. The Indian hare is a poor specimen. Perhaps the most sporting bird in the country which visits India from October to March...

THE LION

The larger carnivores are the lion, the tiger, the panther or leopard, and the cheetah or hunting leopard. It is very people are unaware that the Indian lion is now found only in the Gir Forest of Kathiawar, an interesting and somewhat remote tract...

THE HORSE IN SPORT

PIG-STICKING AND HUNTING

POLO AND RACING

(By Michael E. Berry)

India has often been called not only "a sportsman's paradise." Probably the sports in occupation there would suitably describe it as "a paradise in which sportsman labour." For India is not a playground—the Englishman goes out there primarily to hunt. But the sports is available, and he can get a very good horse for his money. The Englishman enjoys it. He naturally turns to his hobby, and chief among these resources is the horse—his old eye of soul, his prey, it is refreshing to find that India still regards the horse as a commodity. It is as a commodity that the majority of Englishmen...

THE KADIR CUP

The Kadir Cup in India corresponds to the hunting in England, in that it is essentially a local pursuit and cannot be enjoyed unless the sports conditions in any one country. That country...

THE LEOPARD

The leopard or panther is fairly plentiful in the open hills where there is suitable cover for his lair. Modern big game he can live on game, including partridges and jackals, and is frequently found hunting around villages and being on his guard, calves, and dogs. He does not mind whether he lives in the hills or in a sugar-cane field, or in the tannak jungle on the edge of a river...

THE LION

The lion is the largest of the extinct animals of India at present. He is everywhere in the British provinces and in the mountainous regions of the Indian States...

THE WILD DOG

Under the label "canivora" that interesting animal the wild dog should be mentioned. It is one of the most difficult to handle and most dangerous of the mammals of the Indian States...

BIRD LIFE

Small game includes many varieties. The Indian hare is a poor specimen. Perhaps the most sporting bird in the country which visits India from October to March...

THE LION

The larger carnivores are the lion, the tiger, the panther or leopard, and the cheetah or hunting leopard. It is very people are unaware that the Indian lion is now found only in the Gir Forest of Kathiawar, an interesting and somewhat remote tract...

THE HORSE IN SPORT

PIG-STICKING AND HUNTING

POLO AND RACING

(By Michael E. Berry)

India has often been called not only "a sportsman's paradise." Probably the sports in occupation there would suitably describe it as "a paradise in which sportsman labour." For India is not a playground—the Englishman goes out there primarily to hunt. But the sports is available, and he can get a very good horse for his money. The Englishman enjoys it. He naturally turns to his hobby, and chief among these resources is the horse—his old eye of soul, his prey, it is refreshing to find that India still regards the horse as a commodity. It is as a commodity that the majority of Englishmen...

THE KADIR CUP

The Kadir Cup in India corresponds to the hunting in England, in that it is essentially a local pursuit and cannot be enjoyed unless the sports conditions in any one country. That country...

THE LEOPARD

The leopard or panther is fairly plentiful in the open hills where there is suitable cover for his lair. Modern big game he can live on game, including partridges and jackals, and is frequently found hunting around villages and being on his guard, calves, and dogs. He does not mind whether he lives in the hills or in a sugar-cane field, or in the tannak jungle on the edge of a river...

THE LION

The lion is the largest of the extinct animals of India at present. He is everywhere in the British provinces and in the mountainous regions of the Indian States...

THE WILD DOG

Under the label "canivora" that interesting animal the wild dog should be mentioned. It is one of the most difficult to handle and most dangerous of the mammals of the Indian States...

BIRD LIFE

Small game includes many varieties. The Indian hare is a poor specimen. Perhaps the most sporting bird in the country which visits India from October to March...

THE LION

The larger carnivores are the lion, the tiger, the panther or leopard, and the cheetah or hunting leopard. It is very people are unaware that the Indian lion is now found only in the Gir Forest of Kathiawar, an interesting and somewhat remote tract...

THE HORSE IN SPORT

PIG-STICKING AND HUNTING

POLO AND RACING

(By Michael E. Berry)

India has often been called not only "a sportsman's paradise." Probably the sports in occupation there would suitably describe it as "a paradise in which sportsman labour." For India is not a playground—the Englishman goes out there primarily to hunt. But the sports is available, and he can get a very good horse for his money. The Englishman enjoys it. He naturally turns to his hobby, and chief among these resources is the horse—his old eye of soul, his prey, it is refreshing to find that India still regards the horse as a commodity. It is as a commodity that the majority of Englishmen...

THE KADIR CUP

The Kadir Cup in India corresponds to the hunting in England, in that it is essentially a local pursuit and cannot be enjoyed unless the sports conditions in any one country. That country...

THE LEOPARD

The leopard or panther is fairly plentiful in the open hills where there is suitable cover for his lair. Modern big game he can live on game, including partridges and jackals, and is frequently found hunting around villages and being on his guard, calves, and dogs. He does not mind whether he lives in the hills or in a sugar-cane field, or in the tannak jungle on the edge of a river...

THE LION

The lion is the largest of the extinct animals of India at present. He is everywhere in the British provinces and in the mountainous regions of the Indian States...

THE WILD DOG

Under the label "canivora" that interesting animal the wild dog should be mentioned. It is one of the most difficult to handle and most dangerous of the mammals of the Indian States...

BIRD LIFE

Small game includes many varieties. The Indian hare is a poor specimen. Perhaps the most sporting bird in the country which visits India from October to March...

THE LION

The larger carnivores are the lion, the tiger, the panther or leopard, and the cheetah or hunting leopard. It is very people are unaware that the Indian lion is now found only in the Gir Forest of Kathiawar, an interesting and somewhat remote tract...

THE HORSE IN SPORT

PIG-STICKING AND HUNTING

POLO AND RACING

(By Michael E. Berry)

India has often been called not only "a sportsman's paradise." Probably the sports in occupation there would suitably describe it as "a paradise in which sportsman labour." For India is not a playground—the Englishman goes out there primarily to hunt. But the sports is available, and he can get a very good horse for his money. The Englishman enjoys it. He naturally turns to his hobby, and chief among these resources is the horse—his old eye of soul, his prey, it is refreshing to find that India still regards the horse as a commodity. It is as a commodity that the majority of Englishmen...

THE KADIR CUP

The Kadir Cup in India corresponds to the hunting in England, in that it is essentially a local pursuit and cannot be enjoyed unless the sports conditions in any one country. That country...

THE LEOPARD

The leopard or panther is fairly plentiful in the open hills where there is suitable cover for his lair. Modern big game he can live on game, including partridges and jackals, and is frequently found hunting around villages and being on his guard, calves, and dogs. He does not mind whether he lives in the hills or in a sugar-cane field, or in the tannak jungle on the edge of a river...

THE LION

The lion is the largest of the extinct animals of India at present. He is everywhere in the British provinces and in the mountainous regions of the Indian States...

THE WILD DOG

Under the label "canivora" that interesting animal the wild dog should be mentioned. It is one of the most difficult to handle and most dangerous of the mammals of the Indian States...

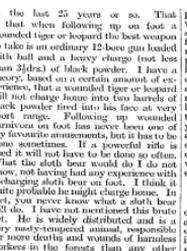

BIRD LIFE

Small game includes many varieties. The Indian hare is a poor specimen. Perhaps the most sporting bird in the country which visits India from October to March...

THE LION

The larger carnivores are the lion, the tiger, the panther or leopard, and the cheetah or hunting leopard. It is very people are unaware that the Indian lion is now found only in the Gir Forest of Kathiawar, an interesting and somewhat remote tract...

BIG GAME IN INDIA.—During his recent tour of India the Viceroy visited Mysore, where he was the guest of the Maharajah of Mysore at Karapur Camp. The Viceroy, the Maharajah of Mysore (left), and the Maharajah Kumar of Berar are seen with a dead tiger shot by the Maharajah Kumar.

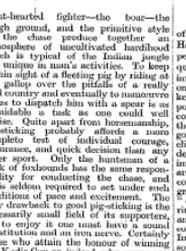

During his recent tour of India the Viceroy visited Mysore, where he was the guest of the Maharajah of Mysore at Karapur Camp. The Viceroy, the Maharajah of Mysore (left), and the Maharajah Kumar of Berar are seen with a dead tiger shot by the Maharajah Kumar.

PIG-STICKING.—A drawing by Mr. C. J. Payne ("Snaffles") illustrating a sport which is particularly popular among British officers in Meerut, Muzaffar, and Delhi.

PIG-STICKING.—A drawing by Mr. C. J. Payne ("Snaffles") illustrating a sport which is particularly popular among British officers in Meerut, Muzaffar, and Delhi.

PIG-STICKING.—A drawing by Mr. C. J. Payne ("Snaffles") illustrating a sport which is particularly popular among British officers in Meerut, Muzaffar, and Delhi.

PIG-STICKING.—A drawing by Mr. C. J. Payne ("Snaffles") illustrating a sport which is particularly popular among British officers in Meerut, Muzaffar, and Delhi.

difficulties and to show wonderfully good sport. As horses are scarce and are never made into good stags and named sakes in England, so three packs usually hunt the jackals who form the chief substitute. He possesses plenty of stamina, but has not the same built-up speed as the greyhound. Consequently, the country being so open, the greyhound is not so successful, and it is then that the pack reveals the impetuosity of the drafts. But if the jack secures a good start and has some cover to aid him, there is much good handwork to be enjoyed. No doubt some of the attraction is due to the fact that the greyhound is so confined to the staff and by the pack. One could hardly imagine oneself in the States, but the calm, easy style of crossing a rough country displayed by some members of the various drafts is latterly perhaps the most striking feature. The Viceroy indicates that they have forgotten the jackals who are the charm of hunting in the provinces.

It is interesting to speculate why so many quite bright leads used to enter Government service in India. In some cases the reason was a hobby. There were many families whose members served in India for generations...

It is interesting to speculate why so many quite bright leads used to enter Government service in India. In some cases the reason was a hobby. There were many families whose members served in India for generations...

It is interesting to speculate why so many quite bright leads used to enter Government service in India. In some cases the reason was a hobby. There were many families whose members served in India for generations...

THE ELEPHANT

The elephant is the largest of the extinct animals of India at present. He is everywhere in the British provinces and in the mountainous regions of the Indian States...

THE WILD DOG

Under the label "canivora" that interesting animal the wild dog should be mentioned. It is one of the most difficult to handle and most dangerous of the mammals of the Indian States...

BIRD LIFE

Small game includes many varieties. The Indian hare is a poor specimen. Perhaps the most sporting bird in the country which visits India from October to March...

THE LION

The larger carnivores are the lion, the tiger, the panther or leopard, and the cheetah or hunting leopard. It is very people are unaware that the Indian lion is now found only in the Gir Forest of Kathiawar, an interesting and somewhat remote tract...