TRACKING THE RHINOCEROS - SHARE YOUR EXPERIENCES!

There are five species of rhinoceros which inhabit countries of Africa and Asia. In general these are critically endangered in large parts of their range. I am in the process of reviewing the historical as well as current distribution and status of the rhinoceros all over the world. There are many possible sources of information, like published reports, specimens preserved in museums or private collections, and photographs in archives. However, there must be many tourists and local residents in the various countries who have seen or photographed rhinos during their travels into the more inaccessible parts of the globe. Any information of rhino sightings or shootings will be welcome, especially reports outside the normal tourist circuits or from dates before 1960. If at all possible, I would like to know when and where the animal was seen (as exactly as possible) and if any photographs would be available. All replies will be treated confidentially and, if requested, will be kept anonymous in any resulting publications.

Please direct all replies to:
