

AFRICANA

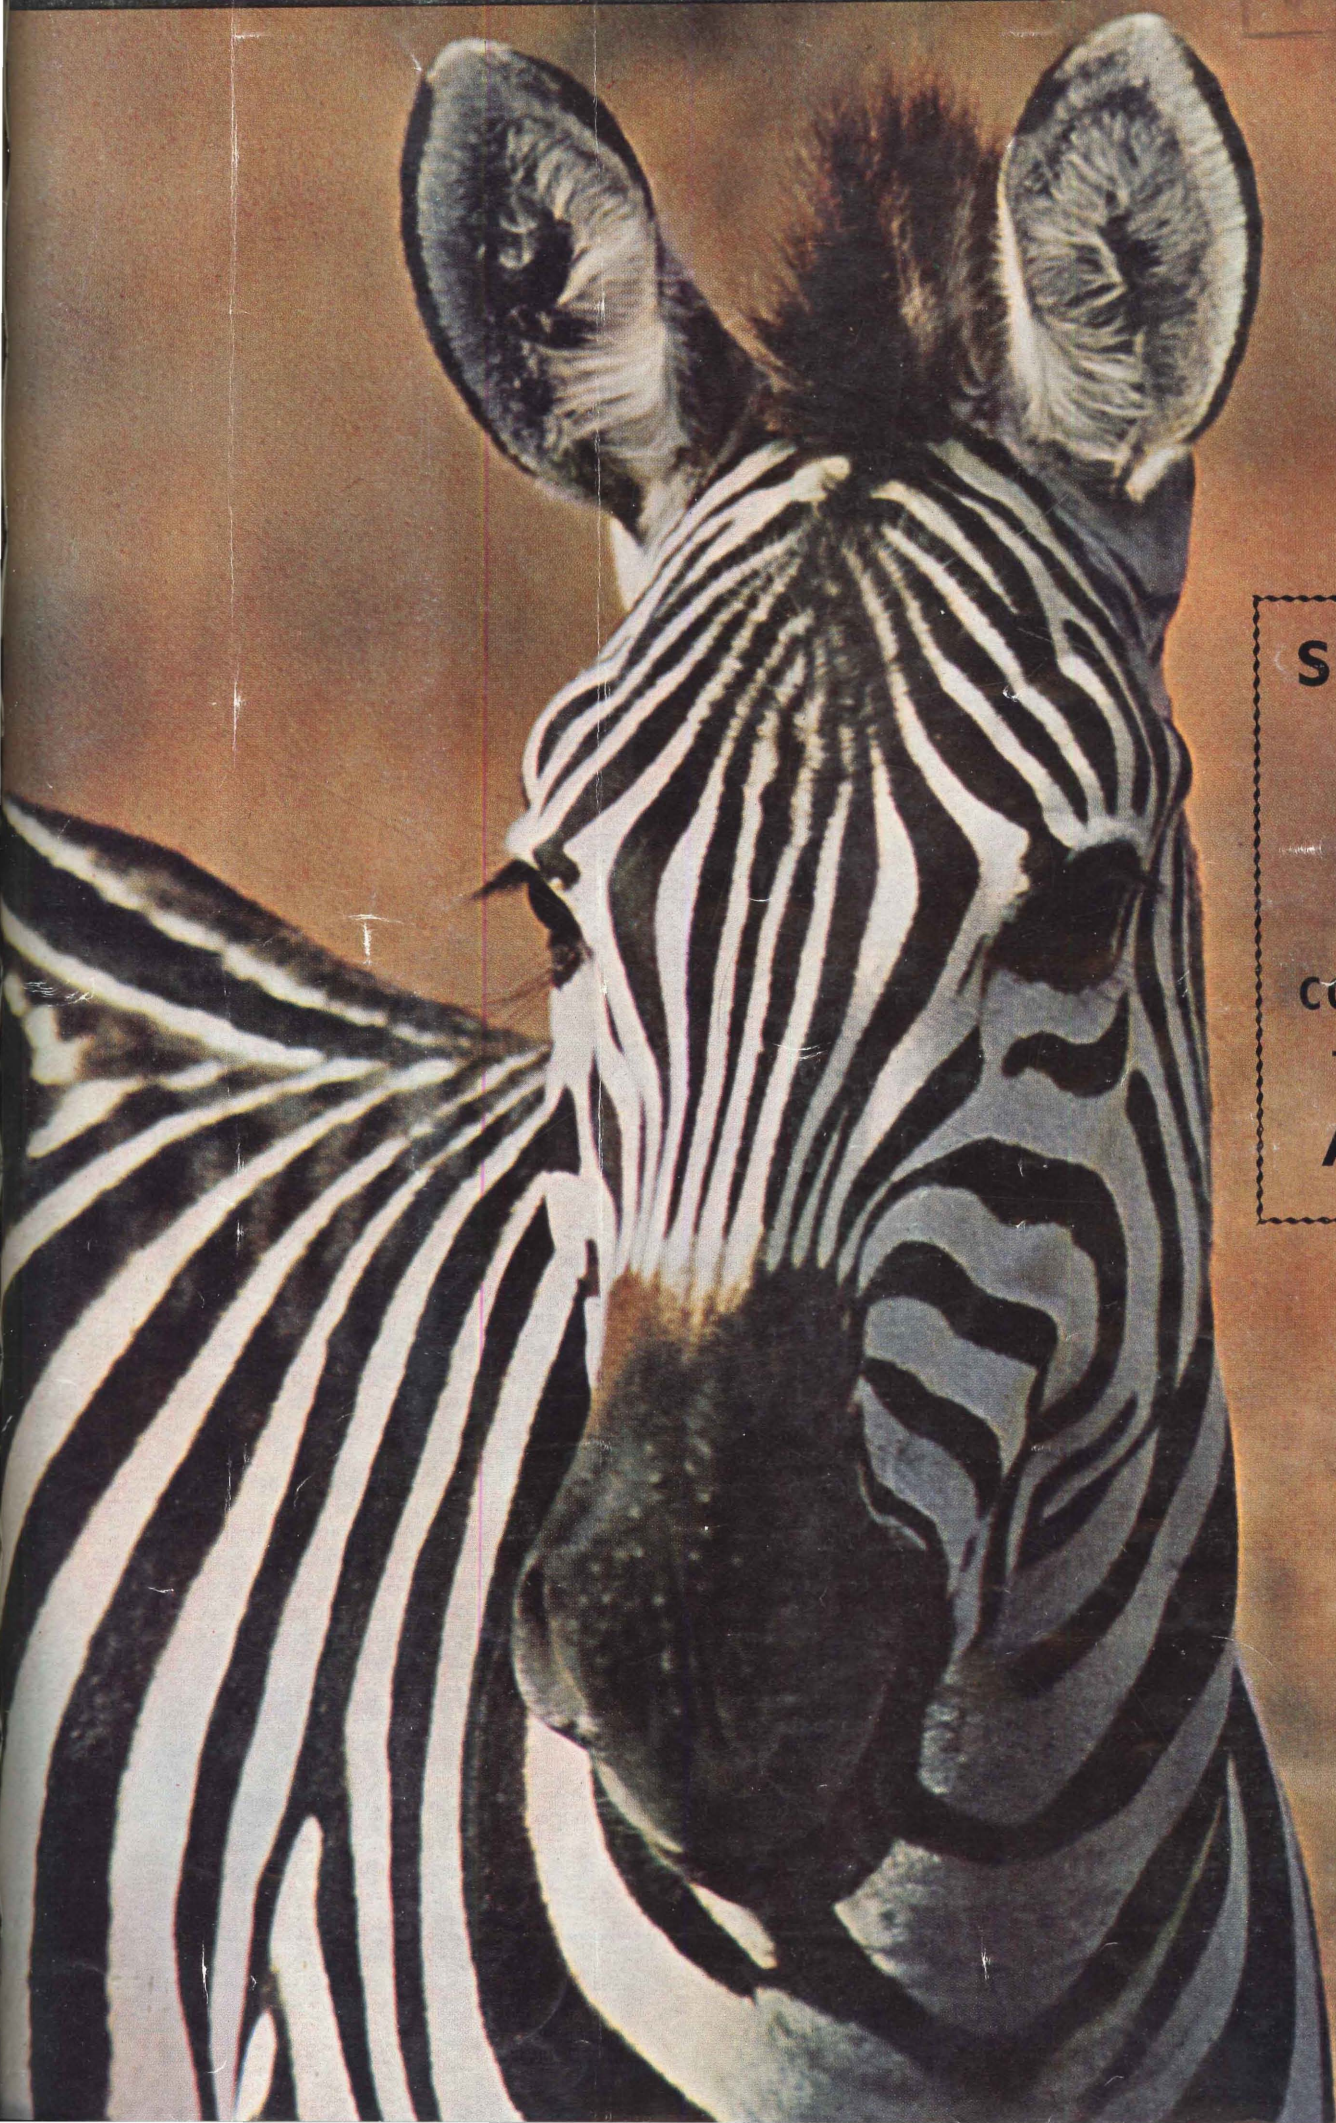

Incorporating the Journal of the

EAST AFRICAN WILD LIFE SOCIETY

Price Shs. 3/-

MARCH, 1963 No. 5

50 U.S. cents

SPECIAL ISSUE
ON WILD LIFE
CONSERVATION
THROUGHOUT AFRICA

CAGE ME A RHINO

PUBLISHED for the first time ever, this remarkable series of pictures by Terry [unclear] [unclear] spotlights the hazards of wild life [unclear] [unclear].

Given the task of catching and removing [unclear] from danger areas, unarmed Rhodesian [unclear] Warden Rupert Fothergill came face to face with an angry rhino in thick bush.

A brief and indecisive game of catch-as-catch-can round a rotting tree followed, until the rhino swung away from Fothergill and [unclear] to tree an African Ranger who, with [unclear] companions, had closed in to draw the animal off.

Joined by his assistant, Lofty Stokes, Fothergill, with catching rope at the ready, baited the animal forward, relying on a fallen branch to stop its final charge.

But the rhinoceros had other ideas.

Struck by the charging rhino
he had sought to save,
Rupert Fothergill
suffered four broken ribs, and
many cuts and bruises.

Despite this his companion, Lofty Stokes, and his team of African helpers, later
caught and shipped
the animal to safety.

Photographer
Terry Spencer
stood his ground
until he, like his companions, was knocked for a six
by the ungrateful
rhinoceros.