1 Acknowledgements

At the end of 2008, Dr. Gabriele Hlavacek resigned from her position as international studbook keeper for the Greater One-horned Rhinoceros. Over more than a decade, she updated the studbook and investigated the origin and life history data of various individual rhinos in order to present all the available information in the studbook. We express our sincere thanks for her committed work.

We would also like to thank all the zoos and institutions keeping Greater One-horned Rhinoceros for their cooperation and help to update the International Studbook 2008 and for sending us copies of their post mortems. All the data of the annual reports returned by April 2009 have been included in this edition. This year, 49 out of 62 institutions keeping Indian rhinos responded to our questionnaire.

Several months ago, we had announced that we would analyse the death causes of captive Greater One-horned Rhinos worldwide to get an idea of the main problems and how widespread they are. So far, we have received information on 99 individuals from a total of 217 death cases up to the end of 2007, and for 11 specimens, no information is available. We regret that very little information has been obtained from animals that died in Asian zoos. The University of Berne, Institute of Animal Pathology has agreed to analyse the post mortems and the results will be published.

Finally, we would like to inform you that Dr. med. vet. Friederike von Houwald has been appointed the new international studbook keeper for the Greater One-horned Rhinoceros. Due to the change of studbook keeper, no genetic and demographic analyses were performed for the 2008 international Indian rhinoceros population. Next year's edition of the studbook will again include detailed analyses of the genetic and demographic situation of the captive population.

Instead, we are pleased to present you the reports of several in situ conservation projects for the Greater one-horned rhinoceros, which all strive to preserve this species and its habitat in India and Nepal and are in need of support.

2 Species Status

The Greater one-horned rhinoceros has been classified by the IUCN Red List recently as vulnerable and is listed in CITES Appendix I.

Due to successful conservation strategies the populations are rising in some areas. The current numbers of 2008 / 2009, according to the IUCN AsRSG, range between 2700 and 2800. This rise in population is mainly attributed to an increase of rhinos living in Kaziranga National Park. The last rhino population estimation (9/10 April 2009) shows an impressive growth of the rhino population of up to 2048 rhinos for Kaziranga National Park.

Nevertheless, poaching is still remaining the major threat to this species and has led to tremendous losses, especially in smaller populations such as in Bardia. In May 2009, 19 Indian rhinoceros carcasses were found buried next to the Indian Nepales border.

Another factor influencing the rhino population in Nepal, is the disappearance of most of alluvial plain grasslands.

The following report was written by Bibhab Kumar Talukdar Chair of the IUCN Asian Rhino Specialist Group (AsRSG)

The past and current distribution range of Greater one-horned or Indian Rhino is summarized in Fig-1. The current estimates of Indian Rhino in India and Nepal are in between 2700-2800 of which about 2300-2370 are distributed in India while about 400-430 in Nepal. In India, the rhinos are mainly recorded from Kaziranga National Park, Orang National Park and Pabitora Wildlife Sanctuary in the state of Assam, Jaldapara Wildlife Sanctuary and Gorumara National Park in West Bengal and Dudhwa National Park in Uttar Pradesh.

Dudhwa National Park: The Dudhwa National Park declared as Dudhwa Tiger Reserve under Project Tiger in 1987 is in the Kheri district of Uttar Pradesh (UP) in Northern India and lies between $28^{\circ}18'N$ and $28^{\circ}42'N$ latitudes and $80^{\circ}28'E$ and $80^{\circ}57'E$ longitudes, approximately 30 km south of the Nepal Himalayas. It is 490 sq km in extent with buffer zone of 124 sq km under the Park administration. Currently the rhino population in the park is in between 25 and 30.

Jaldapara Wildlife Sanctuary: The sanctuary is located in the flood plains of the river Torsa and other small rivers, which have created large tracts of grasslands sustaining a small population of one horned rhinos. Jaldapara Wildlife Sanctuary lies in the civil district of Jalpaiguri, West Bengal, which situated between the latitudes $25^{\circ}58''$ and $27^{\circ}45''$ North and longitudes $89^{\circ}08''$ and $89^{\circ}55''$ in the East. The total area of the sanctuary at present stands at 216.51 sq. km. The current rhino population in Jaldapara is 108 as estimated in 2005. The estimates of rhino in Jaldapara Wildlife Sanctuary carried out by the West Bengal Forest Department is summarized in Table-1

Records of rhino poaching of Jaldapara Wildlife Sanctuary were not properly maintained prior to 1968. Verifiable reports of poaching of rhino are available only from 1968 onwards and it appears that intensive poaching of rhinos between the years 1968-69 and 1975 had brought down the population of rhinos drastically from 80 to 14.

Gorumara National Park: The Gorumara National Park is located in the district of Jalpaiguri in the flood plains of Jaldhaka and Murti Rivers. It is situated between 88°50' & 88°60" E Longitude and 26°44' & 26°75' N Latitude. The area of the Gorumara National Park is about 79.45 km². The current rhino population in Gorumara is 27 as estimated in 2005. The estimate of rhinos in Gorumara National Park carried out by the West Bengal Forest Department is summarized in Table-2.

The reports from Gorumara National Park do not indicate any large scale poaching of rhino in the National Park area and its surroundings during the last few decades. The last poaching case was reported in 1992 and took place in the Kathambari area when a rhino strayed out of the National Park.

Pabitora Wildlife Sanctuary: The Pabitora Wildlife Sanctuary (38.81 km²) is located within 26°12'N to 26°15'N and 91°57'E to 92°5'E. The sanctuary area is flat with a gentle east to west inclination excluding Bura-Mayong hillock in a flat terrain in the flood plains of river Brahmaputra, a basin-like structure in the midst of Mayong, Kamarpur and Monohar hillocks finely-dotted with water bodies, grassland and tree forest. The area is part of Brahmaputra River floodplain; as such, water remains year-round in different lakes and swamps which makes Pabitora ideal rhino habitat. Pabitora is 60% –grassland, 18% wetland, 20% woodland and 2% other kinds of habitat. Pabitora Wildlife Sanctuary (PWLS) has been successful in rhino conservation. The current rhino population in Pabitora is 84 as estimated in the year 2009. Table-3 summarizes the area's rhino census results:

PWLS has witnessed a steady increase in its rhino population. One of the major problems that the sanctuary management faces is poaching, and, as the area of Pabitora is very small, the straying of rhinos from the sanctuary also leads to poaching outside the rhino protected area. Other problems include degradation of habitat, immense biotic pressure, annual floods, overhead high tension power, human- animal conflict, siltation and scarcity of water during dry seasons, invasion of Ipomoea spp into grasslands, grazing by livestock from fringe areas into protected areas.

Orang National Park: The Orang National Park has been often regarded as the man made forest dedicated to rhino conservation that lies within the geographical limits of 92° 16' E to 92°27'E longitude and 26°29'N to 26°40'N latitude. Orang was earlier a village which later on was transformed into a forest with sizeable areas of grassland and wetlands. The total area of the National park is 78.80 km². Orang was declared as a wildlife sanctuary in the year 1985 keeping in mind the potential habitat of Orang for rhino conservation along with other wildlife and further upgraded into a national park the year 1999.

The national park has witnessed severe poaching threats during 1994-2000 when half of it's rhino population was poached by well organized gangs. In 1991, the total population of rhino was 97, but due to an increase in poaching the population had declined to only 46 by 1999. However due to concerted efforts of the forest department, supported by NGOs the rhino population in the park increased to 68 by 2006. The current rhino population in Orang NP as estimated in the year 2009 was 64. Currently this National Park is supported solely by Basel Zoo.

Problems and threats include damage to habitat composition, severe poaching, lack of community participation, insufficient funds available, weed invasion in grasslands, poor habitat connectivity, and declining grasslands (while woodlands have increased). Nevertheless, Orang could support between 100 and 150 rhinos. If NGOs and local people support conservation, there is the possibility of increasing the rhino population in the park, particularly with well designed and run awareness and education initiatives, coupled with ecotourism.

Kaziranga National Park: Kaziranga National Park (KNP), with the current area of over 800 km² including all the addition areas is known worldwide for its success in the conservation of greater one-horned rhino. It harbors the world's largest population of one-horned rhino: 1855 animals in 2006. The Kaziranga National Park lies between Latitudes 26°33' N to 26°50' N and Longitudes 93° 05' E to 93° 41' E. Its conservation value was recognized when it become one of the World Heritage Sites notified in India by UNESCO in 1985. A symbol of dedication for the conservation of animals and their habitat, Kaziranga, represents the single largest protected area within North-east India and provides the most important long term viable conservation area for Rhinoceros unicornis.

The current rhino population in the national park is 2048 as estimated in 2009 by the Assam Forest Department. The rhino population in Kaziranga between 1966 and 2009 has been summarized in Table-5 and shows the significant growth of the population over the years.

The single largest threat to rhino conservation in the national park is poaching. Besides poaching, the changes in habitat composition and loss of land mass within Kaziranga due to shifting of the Brahmaputra River towards the south has emerged. This is now an increasingly important threat to wildlife in the region. Protection alone is not a guarantee for the longer term and there is an urgent need for landscape solutions and attention to emerging threats driven by anthropogenic impacts and in particular climate change.

Fig-2: Rhino poaching in three protected areas of Assam

Manas Nacional Park: The Manas Wildlife Sanctuary which was established in 1928 with an area of 391 sq km has long history of its becoming a world heritage site in 1985. Subsequently its area was further increased up to 500 km² when it was upgraded to a national park (26°37'-26°50'N, 90°45'-91°15'E) in 1990 by the Assam government. Currently the Manas National Park lies within the newly created Baksa and Chirang district of western Assam.

Manas had witnessed socio-political unrest during the 1990s. Severe damage to its infrastructure is responsible for the loss of effective anti-poaching along with a decline in wildlife numbers including the rhino. Prior to the unrest, about 80 rhinos were estimated to be within the Manas National Park. However during the unrest all the rhino were poached by organized gangs of poachers.

However since 2006, the Assam Forest Department in association with the Wildlife Trust of India shifted four rescued and orphaned female rhino from the Wildlife Rescue and rehabilitation Centre, Kaziranga to Manas National Park and put them inside a boma. Subsequently, two male rhinos from Pabitora Wildlife Sanctuary were translocated into Manas NP on 12th April 2008 as part of the Indian Rhino Vision 2020 (IRV 2020). There are plans to translocate about 18 more rhinos into Manas NP from Pabitora WLS and Kaziranga NP by end of 2009.

Laokhowa Wildlife Sanctuary: Laokhowa Wild Life Sanctuary (LWLS) is situated in the state of Assam, India between the latitudes 27°30'N and 27°30'N and Longitudes 94°08'E and 94°08'E in the flood plain of river Brahmaputra. The PA is located in the central portion of the state of Assam. It is situated in the extreme north of Nagaon district touching the southern boundaries of Sonitpur district. The PA covers a part of the civil sub-division of Koliabor and Nagaon.

Laokhowa WLS harboured about 70 rhinos in 1980. However during the ethnic unrest in between 1980 and 1985, most of its rhino were poached. In 1981, six rhinos were poached, while in 1982 a total of 11 and in 1983 a total of 30 rhinos were killed by poachers and thus opened the pathways to exterminate the rhino population from the WLS rapidly. Currently there is no resident population of rhino although rhino do move into the WLS from Kaziranga occasionally.

The Indian Rhino Vision 2020 has the long term intention to re-stock rhino in the Laokhowa WLS. If the local people support conservation and there is the political will the possibility of rhino coming back to Laokhowa exists. The habitat is fine but there is a need to improve the security mechanism to ensure rhino protection in the WLS in years to come.

Threats to Rhino in India include: poaching, invasive species like Mimosa, Ipomea, Leea, Mikania and grazing. Grazing is a problem in Jaldapara, Gorumara, Pabitora and Orang NP. The cattle present in the fringe villages are characterized by poor health and are of poor quality most probably due to a lack of an organised breeding programme and other inputs. The effect of cattle grazing is more pronounced during the dry seasons when there is competition for fodder between the wild herbivores and the cattle. The existing input for cattle improvement is very limited and there is a dearth of proper veterinary care in the villages

A few alien invasive weeds and climbers like lemon grass, Leea spp. and Mikania spp. are infamous for colonizing the open forest areas of Jaldapara sanctuary which, in turn, suppress the growth of palatable fodder grasses and other tree spp. Mikania spp. includes Mikania cordata and Mikania scandens. Other weeds that are commonly found are Lantana camara, Eupatorium spp, Clerodendron spp, Cassia tora and Solanum nigrum etc. All these weeds are damaging the habitats of rhino and other wild animals.

NEPAL

The history of rhino in Nepal is one of a massive decline starting in the 1950s to <100 by 1964. This population was isolated to Chitwan which became a National Park (CNP). This period was followed by intense protection efforts which brought some recovery. 612 animals were reported in Nepal by 2000. This recovery effort included the establishment of new populations through translocation to Shuklaphanta Wildlife Reserve (SWR) and Bardia National Park (BNP) . Unfortunately the Nepal population declined from then onwards an estimated 435 at the end of April 2008. Poaching pressure continues and the most important losses in terms of population impacts have been in BNP, which had an estimated loss of >100 animals since the translocation of 83 in the 1980s and now has only 20 left. If this decline continues it will soon no longer be a viable population. SWR has only 5 animals and remains non-viable. Chitwan remains the stronghold and although the count of 372 in 2005 was followed by a count of 408 in 2008 the methods of counting were improved so direct comparison should be made with caution. The main agencies involved in rhino conservation over the years have included Nepal Trust for Nature Conservation (NTNC), Department of National Parks and Wildlife Conservation, World Wide Fund for Nature Conservation (WWF), Zoological Society of London others.

115 natural deaths and 149 poaching incidents were reported over this period but this is possibly an underestimate. Although habitat conditions might be reducing capacity for growth, for the sake of argument, we can estimate potential growth at 5%. At this rate we would have expected ~ 300 rhino to add to the 612 = 912 over the period of 2000 to 2008. Subtracting the known losses from the difference between the current population and what was expected means total loss can be estimated ~ 564 and the current poaching figures or deaths would represent under-reporting = >55%. This is speculative but shows the importance of monitoring the populations more regularly and intensely.

3 Conservation Activities

3.1 Conservation Activities in India

Indian Rhino Vision 2020

In India, WWF India in cooperation with the Assam Forest Department is working in close cooperation with several partners on the Indian Rhino Vision 2020 (International Rhino Foundation, US Fish and Wildlife Service, Zoo Basel, Zoological Society of San Diego, Cincinnati Zoo, Los Angeles Zoo, Philadelphia Zoo, Woodland Park Zoo, Fondation Ensemble, CERZA, Amersfoort Zoo, Disney Worldwide Services, EAZA Rhino Campaign 2006). The aim of this effort is to have over 3000 Greater one-horned rhinos by 2020, living in India and Nepal. To reach this aim, several National Parks in India have started a close cooperation to protect and to reintroduce the rhinos back to where they once were found in abundant numbers. As Kaziranga and Pobitora NP are those areas where the caring capacity of the National Park has been almost reached, it is planned to translocate several numbers to other areas. Apart from translocation of rhinos, a major effort is made by training of and handing out the right equipment to the scouts in order to protect the rhinos in their habitat. In addition to that infrastructure, housing and communication tools are improved so that actions against poaching activities can be coordinated and carried out effectively. Furthermore, IRV 2020 is working in close cooperation with the locals living around the NPs, teaching, training and supporting them in their needs so that conservation becomes as important to them as it is for the rhinos.

3.2 Conservation Activities in Nepal

Crisis to Biological Management: Rhinoceros, grassland and public engagement Nepal
Darwin Initiative Project 2007-2010

Dr Richard Kock Dr Rajan Amin and Mr Nick Lindsay Zoological Society of London

Greater one-horned rhinoceros are restricted to small protected areas (PAs) primarily in north-eastern India and Nepal (Chitwan National Park-CNP, Bardiya National Park-BNP and Suklaphanta Wildlife Reserve-SWR). These rhinos are highly vulnerable due to intensification of agriculture and habitat loss, a burgeoning human population and poaching. Furthermore, Nepal has been facing dramatic socio-economic and political challenges over the last decade that negatively impacted the recovery of rhino; which had occurred during the latter half of the 20th Century after near extinction previously. Numbers in CNP increased from 100 animals in the early 1980s to 544 in 2000 allowing establishment of founder groups in BNP and SWR (83 and 4 rhinos were translocated between 1986 and 2003 to BNP and SWR respectively). However, these declined by 2005 to less than 370 in CNP and less than 40 in BNP, with only 7 in SWR. Nepal still holds the second largest population in the world and for this and its other endangered species, such as the Ganges dolphin (also in severe decline), Bengal tiger (also in decline) and Asian wild elephant, and CNP has been designated a World Heritage Site.

The project was launched at a time of opportunity, the armed conflict in Nepal was coming to an end and a political process towards democratic government had been initiated. The proximate causes for rhino declines were poaching and loss of grassland habitat from encroachment and invasive alien plant species (IAPS) reducing available forage and causing risky migration of rhino outside of the PAs and reduced health and productivity. The underlying causes were weak anti-poaching systems and law enforcement, ineffective security, inadequate biological management of rhino and habitat, and a failure of the buffer zone community initiatives to provide an effective buffer from encroachment. There was inadequate awareness of the rapid deterioration of the situation with a lack of transparency at many levels. The uncertain political situation was also reducing the effectiveness of government agencies and public engagement was superficial. New policies to address changing circumstances and/or innovative strategies were also lacking.

The first two years of the project were focused on the rhino, habitat and public engagement mainly in BNP with some activities initiated in CNP and SWR and including a National Rhino Count which was a major exercise involving 50 elephants and 200 staff over a month. Our main partners, Nepal Trust for Nature Conservation and Department of National Parks and Wildlife Conservation were eager to implement and were more than receptive to our ideas. The project was productive in areas of policy (initiating new Anti Poaching Systems and the Sanctuary approach – the latter focused on Suklaphanta Reserve where there are only 5 rhino and here a link with the zoo community would be beneficial to source rhino for reinforcement), public engagement based on community village theatre which was also taken from local levels to National and International stages, departmental staff training, establishment of standardised systems for monitoring and census, establishment of baselines on alien invasive plant species, developing a growing health partnership to address disease and veterinary capacity issues in the Parks and buffer zones, a strong educational programme in Bardia with extension addressing the remote village communities which were allied to poaching. Poaching and other pressures continued to take their toll of many species but most significantly rhino, which gave urgency to the work. By the end of year 2 a major poaching gang had been caught in Bardia, astonishingly it was involving rogue elements from the Army which are mandated to protect to rhino and this caused a storm. It was the community engagement with led to this exposure and since this drama no rhino have been lost from the park in over a year and a silent revolution is taking place in the way the Army functions in the Parks. Now the project is focusing more on Chitwan where the larger population of rhino exists and where poaching continues unabated. Here another big challenge is dealing with alien invasive plant species (Mikania sp.) and the project has mapped the distribution and is now researching the drivers for this plant which is destroying the habitat. There is only a year left but we hope the project momentum will take our partners on to solving the crises in Chitwan as well.

In summary; the project was set up to 1) strengthen and increase the capacity (particularly monitoring and surveillance of rhino and in anti-poaching) of Nepal's existing wildlife department officials, rangers and communities across the network of PAs (CNP, BNP, SWR); 2) strengthen metapopulation approach (including a feasibility study on sanctuary approach in SWR and/or community areas); and 3) facilitate improved governance of rhino conservation, improved public engagement and integration of politicians, stakeholders and local communities in conservation efforts and decision-making. It is achieving these goals and more but will continue to need support from the international community to conserve this vulnerable charismatic species, the Greater One Horned Rhino.
