

in time for the "all clear" and they would be too knocked out to do anything if it needed to be done, anyway. There was an MT Section using the stables, and in the attic there was a .22 rifle range.

When the air force first came to Heslington I remember seeing a crowd outside the Charles XII pub. In the centre of the crowd were two young WRAF girls sat on a stuffed rhinoceros that had been left when everything had been sold off from the Hall. I was later told that it had been shot by one of the Lord Deramores and had been left in the stables. The last I ever saw of it was later when it was used for giving rides between the two pubs.
