

Inspiring communities for 10 YEARS via Rafiki wa Faru

It is ... amazingly ... the tenth anniversary of Rafiki wa Faru, our wonderful environmental education programme. Over the years, almost 8,000 school children, as well as teachers and village leaders, have come to see endangered species programmes first hand in the field.

Lucy Fitzjohn | Project Administrator, Mkomazi Rhino Sanctuary

Above: Students play games to learn more about rhino conservation, as well as receiving learning books that they can take home

Rafiki wa Faru is really one of the best things we have ever done for the communities and school children in the surrounding villages.

It continues to be a huge success, with the colourful bus trundling into Mkomazi National Park and the Rhino Sanctuary, bringing young students who we teach about wildlife and habitat conservation and above all, about black rhinos.

Everything is carefully designed to give each learner a truly memorable experience; from entering the Park through the gate at the Tanzanian National Park HQ, to arriving at the Rhino Sanctuary and hopefully seeing a rhino, meeting security guards and rhino trackers, and then walking up the hill to the education centre where they are taught key messages about rhino conservation.

We often hear that the students make up songs about Mkomazi on their bus journey back home at the end of the day. A beautiful sound that must be! Distinct and poignant memories resound about the plight of the rhino, the threats they face and the huge effort that goes into protecting them.

MAIN IMAGE MAGGIE ESSON

At Mkomazi, we practise a multi-faceted approach to rhino security, including traditional protection methods such as alarmed fencing and anti-poaching patrols, as well as aerial surveillance, training scouts and a tracker dog unit. But winning the hearts and minds of local communities, teaching them about flagship species such as the black rhino, and inspiring them to take on positive environmental action is just as necessary to ensure that these precious rhinos thrive in the long-term.

The students that form part of the Rafiki wa Faru programme are crucial to this endeavour. Rafiki wa Faru translates as 'Friends of Rhinos' and we are fortunate to have these school children as friends.

We are enormously grateful to Save the Rhino International, US Fish & Wildlife Service, Chester Zoo and Tusk Trust for all they have done to support this programme since it began. With such great partners, we hope we can ensure that this fine programme will flourish long into the future.

