OPEN CAMPAIGN ON OVERLOADING OF MOTORTRUCKS

Collier Issues Orders for Strict Surveillance of All Commercial Cars.

Barron Collier, Deputy Police Commissioner in charge of the Bureau of Public Safety, New York Police Department, it was learned yesterday has issued orders for a campaign against the overloading of motortrucks and commercial cars. Every patrolman of the traffic squads, motorcycle squads and headquarters squad have orders to issue summonses to drivers of all overloaded vehicles. It is pointed out to be no use from the Deputy Commissioner that overloaded trucks are not only a violation to the traffic ordinances, but that they are a menace on the highways of the city.

Magistrate Gaspar J. Lioto and Magistrate P. A. McCloskey sitting in the Brooklyn Traffic Court yesterday declared that all truck drivers brought before them charged with having loads of more than three tons on their trucks would receive fines of $25 to $5 for the first offense. The second offense charged against a defendant is to run to the extent of from $50 to $100, while the third is most severe, from $100 to $250. Jail sentences also can be imposed of from one to 30 days.

For the past week Police Lieutenants Martin Noonan, in charge of Headquarters Squad, and Johnson, in charge of the Boro Motorcycle Squad, have ordered that all drivers of overloaded trucks be warned that action would be taken should they be found after Dec. 10 with an overload.

All manufacturers of motors are required by law to specify upon a plate attached to the body of a commercial car the maximum load the vehicle may carry without danger. The police upon discovering a vehicle which in their opinion is carrying an excess load will order the driver of such vehicle to the nearest coal yard scales. If it is found that an overload is being carried, the driver will be given a summons. He will also be required to unload the excess weight carried to the scales, and each time as he may return for it, with an empty vehicle.

In New Jersey the offense of overloading motortrucks is punishable by fines ranging from $200 to $500, or by consignment to the county jail for a term not to exceed six months, or by both fine and imprisonment, as determined by the magistrate. On Long Island certain sections call for fines of $100 to $200 are the general rule for driving with an overloaded vehicle.

CONDITIONS FAIR IN LOCAL INDUSTRY

Brooklyn, the weekly magazine of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, in reviews in its current issue today the printing paints and varnishes, lowery, metals and machinery and supplies industries. Elmer Schatzel reports for printing of the paper volume of business, although conditions have not been as uniformly good as last year. Business with most paint and varnish manufacturers took an upward turn in November and that month too will be a busy one, writes Carl J. Schumann.

W. A. Simon reports the last two weeks for the jewelry trade as fallen off, due apparently to the warm weather. He finds, however, business good in the South and West, despite this a good holiday season is looked forward to.

M. H. Lott finds the lumber, metal and machinery industries would like a larger volume of business, although business in general is fairly good.

Activity in the coffee industry, according to J. Lester Cassidy, was steady during November as it was for the year approaches there are only perknown to meet the immediate requirements, this party due to the desire to decrease stocks on hand.

BANK SECURES DECISION.

(Special to The Eagle.)

Albany, Dec. 8.—In a decision of Justice Cropsey, sitting in Special Term in the Supreme Court, Kings county, the Brooklyn Trust Company, appellant, in its action against the Peoples Trust Company, Brooklyn, the court of Appeals has not rendered a decision affirming the order of the Appellate Division, with costs. This order reversed a special Term order and granted the defendant bank's motion for permission to amend its answer and also by pleading as a special defense a plea of res judicata. The plaintiff company alleged that the company was insolvent of $2,700 through the wrongful acts of John F. Ennis, the then president of the company, in the conversion to his own corporate funds deposited with the defendant bank.

TO SETTLE STRAKHAN ESTATE.

(Special to The Eagle.)

Albany, Dec. 8.—The court of Appeals has just handed down a decision in the matter of the petition of the Kings County Trust Company, as executor of the last will and testament of Frederick Strakhan, deceased, Henry E. Strakhan, deceased, Henry Ely. The only controversy related to the construction and legal effect of provision of the capital stock of the Atlantic Dock Company, and the income therefrom, as contained in the will. The highest state tribunal affirmed, with costs in all parties, payable out of the estate, the order of the Appellate Division, which modified in some respects the provisions of the decree of the Kings County surrogate as to several trusts.

200 Trophies of the Hunt in Jungle of India Given to American Museum of Natural History by Englishmen Who Tell Exciting Story of Tracking Wild Beasts to Lairs

1—A leopard, having been put up while beating the jungle with elephants, is shot through the high grass. The length of the leopard is 7 feet 8 inches.
3—A male and female specimen of Russell's viper, obtained in Zolin, Burma.
4—Bull elephant photographed as he fell. This animal measured 9 feet 5 inches at the shoulder. Presented to the American Museum by the Maharaja of Mysore.

By N. P. STEDMAN.

A FEMALE rhinoceros too modest to bathe before them, a tigress more afraid of a movie camera than men and a 9-ton mammoth elephant who was so friendly and tame that he insisted upon making themselves for killing him were but a few of the incidents experienced during the Major Vernay and Lt. Col. Faunthorpe had during their recent hunting trip in India to secure specimens of Indian mammals for the American Museum of Natural History, New York.

Both Mr. Vernay and Col. Faunthorpe are Englishmen, but their enthusiasm for America led them, in their own expense, to undertake the costly Indian hunting trip. Only a taxidermist was supplied by the museum authorities, to care for the collection they brought back, which is now being mounted, in one of the finest in the museum and certainly the best ever given any American museum by admiring foreigners.

Big Game Hunters' Caravan.

Hunting in India must be done in winter, as white men cannot stand the excessive summer heat. Early in the season, therefore, Major Vernay and Faunthorpe—the latter a native-born Englishman—left Indian soon after the Indian conference session ended. They had a caravan of more than a hundred natives, including 30 hunters, more than 20 elephants, a quantity of stores and medicine and extensive apparatus for taxidermist are some of the things that made up a big game hunter's equipment, which assumes the proportions of an army corps as it moves over the high grassy plains or through the dense jungles of India.

Like an army corps advancing, the natives, the tigress, the elephants, the tanks, the hunters, the machine guns, the forces advance beating the high grass and one bushes to drive the tiger and rhino from their hiding place. It is a regular battle, says Lt. Col. Faunthorpe, for the natives are shooting and occasional tigers are being fired into, he says he wears the big game from its hiding place.

Close Quarters with Tigers.

Once while beating through a dense grass that stood as much as 10 feet high, a wounded tigress sprang from the grass, pounced on the shoulder of the elephant Col. Faunthorpe was riding and would have sunk her deadly teeth into the elephant's neck had not the Colonel, himself startled by the surprise, put a bullet into the tigress' brain.

Rhinoceros were the first specimens the hunters went after in Nepal. The Nepalese Government put several elephants at the disposal of the hunters as well as some of the natives, who have the reputation of being the best trackers in India. With them on one second day in the Nepal jungle they came upon a female and a small calf who was living in some high grass. The male had been driven off the herd by the mother, and the calf was very small. The animals were easily tracked down, and the rhino soon had him and herded him back. Dyott, our mahout, was near the bath for the next two days, but the old rhino would not go near it."

Killing a Big Rhinoceros.

Only by offering the head guide a big reward could the hunters induce the natives to go near them on the trail of a big male rhino. "We found him wallowing in a pool not far from the river," said the Colonel. "He was breathing heavily from exhaustion and very cautious. When he caught our scent he charged us, but we dodged him. He and I put a bullet in his brain. He stood motionless for a moment, then sank down, stone dead. It was a big male with tusks 3 feet long and had evidently been fighting, for he had both tusks broken off and his stomach badly torn.

"Stimulated by the reward we paid for the rhino, the head guide, brother of one of the villagers, who spoke a little English, and Indians and Europeans, headed by Major Vernay, Dyott and Faunthorpe. "Being fond of tiger hunting, I did not remain with the party the next day with Dyott and Vernay. We beat the jungle for a mile on each of trees and bush jungle. I posted myself on the heavy grass on the dry River. Dyott, with his mahout, was in the jungle on the left (a bank of trees which divided the two beats). Vernay and Faunthorpe were on the right. The tigress was from the forest.

A Nine-Foot Tigress.

"I took a position on the edge of the reddish beside the patch. The tiger certainly enough was not in the patch at all but came to a hole from bush outside it, and Dyott, with his camera, must have passed within 10 yards of her. She must have smelled me when the beat was nearly finished, for she left the patch and was knocked down with a heavy shot from my rifle. She was up in a moment and charged me, but I was prepared for this, and another shot from my rifle stopped her. The head shot to her nerves, and she fell dead. I measured her and found she was 9 feet 2 inches long. She was a fine specimen, measuring nine feet, with a heavy coat and will be immortalized in the New York Museum.

"The next day we beat for another tigress. Dyott, with the Colonel, continued, "came to a strip of heavy brush, Dyott and two jungle, which narrowed down to a point at the end, and was then separated by a broad nullah from the covers of which ear and two-tail Lieut. Ballantyne fired. This tigress had come from the nullah to the patch and the mahouts said it was impossible to get her out through it. On the other hand, there was no hope of shooting her in the open. Dyott got a shot at her as she broke from the patch and the tigress was killed. She was a female with cubs.

Movie Camera Into Play.

"About 30 natives were enlisted for beating and placed in trees. Dyott, driven six elephants with instructions to make a good deal of noise, while the Nepalese lieutenant, armed with an gun, maintained an encouraging shout from the mahout. The tigress was forced out of the nullah and, as she emerged, Dyott, who had his camera ready, got a splendid opportunity to obtain a beautiful picture of a tigress coming into the open, including the splendor of about 10 feet of her tail, which was carried at her. The tigress got into the open section of Lieut.'s beat when he fired with.

"Dyott says that he passed with his movie camera on a fallen tree to an open space in the nullah, while Vernay and I on elephants took up a position on the edge of the nullah. We stopped, the head shout to her nerves, and she fell dead. Dyott photographed her as she showed her fight. With another shot I finished her, she then made a last lunge to the nullah, where she died from the head shouts. We did not get out of the nullah, as the dead grass and bushes made it impossible to the tigress. The cubs escaped.

Elephant Inspects Camera.

One day the hunters ran upon a herd of wild elephants. There was no big leader among them, but there were left one of them, one of the elephants became interested in the camera and would not up to it. In a hand at it. Only by a valley in the jungle was the animal frightened sufficiently after passing the herd a big leader was captured another time.

GIRLS TRAINING SCHOOL HOLDS HOUSEWARMING

Girls' Training School, Inc., 1 Pierrepont street, Brooklyn, located at 1443 Bedford avenue, held a housewarming in the lobby of this institution. The occasion was in honor of the new home which, it is said, the completion of the main building, and the formal opening and dedication of the two house annexes which constitutes the board of managers.

Mrs. Frederick Cromwell, president, made a talk in the face of the fact that the institution has more than a staggering debt seemed inevitable. She said, however, that not only was completed, but, in a considerable measure, furnished. The house will now also be taken care of 12 girls each girl having a room to herself. There is a well-stocked library, a gymnasium, a reception room and a living room, etc. In the rear is a playground.

About six years ago the cats wanted to be a home for girls who, for one reason or another, were not getting along in the administration building. The girls were given rooms in the private rooms. Here the girls secure their training in housework under the direction of Miss Mary Norton, a graduate of P. S. No. 58. A few of them go to Pratt Institute and the Y. W. C. A. Domestic science and the girls are carefully instructed in domestic science.

Religiously, they are not neglected. Every Sunday morning the girls become a reserved seats in Bedford Presbyterian Church. They are also required to attend Bible school practically every Sunday afternoon. On the evening they worship in "The Little Church Around the Corner." Named by one of the "parishioners" who attends the church on Thursday evening they listen, for an hour or so, to lectures by various Episcopal clergymen.

Mrs. Cromwell, president of the board of trustees, presided at the meeting. Among those present were Mrs. Frederick Cromwell, Mrs. Dr. Hastings Hart, director of Child Welfare Department of the Russell Sage Foundation; Dr. A. W. Cutler, Dr. A. Percival Hagen and Dr. J. Edward Young. Many well-known Brooklyn people were present.

A banner, held by the girls reading "Welcome Home," was a feature to be used in purchasing linens and silverware for the dining room.

HOLD ANNUAL DINNER

About 200 men and women, some guests of St. Andrew's Brotherhood and some of the congregation, Dec. 5th, at a dinner at the Kismet Temple, Clermont and Lafayette ave. Prizes and entertainment was given to professionals during the dinner. A menu followed.

J. OLDEN ARMOUR SAILS.

J. Olden Armour, Brooklyn leaf tobacco planter, yesterday for Europe on business and pleasure trip, the nature of which was not revealed.

FATHER-SON DINNER

The Memorial Presbyterian Church held a father-and-son dinner at the church vestry room, E. Sidney's pl. and 7th ave., Friday night.

The value of home was the principal topic discussed by those present. Fathers, former national secretary of the Woodcraft League of America, John H. Hallock, an expert in color photography, exhibited original pictures.

The arrangements were under the direction of R. H. Platt and the Rev. John Barlow, pastor of the church.
