

DEATH OF A RHINO—the rare, “protected” animal whose shooting by the royal hunting party in Nepal last Monday brought protests from wild-life experts in Britain. The rhino lies dead in the jungle grass (left in the picture), killed by Foreign Secretary the Earl of Home—who had missed a tigress with four shots. In the background: part of the ring of elephants which had penned the rhino in a death-trap arena. The Queen is seen in her howdah—elephant-back passenger box—in the top right of the picture. The Duke of Edinburgh, spectator of the hunt because of his injured trigger finger, is aboard the elephant next but one on the Queen's right. Lord Home is in the front of the howdah on the Duke's right.

More pictures of the jungle death trap are in the Centre Pages.

"Ambrosia better than home-made rice puddings"

says cookery writer and teacher
Mrs. Margot Burbidge

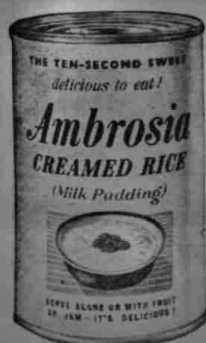

"MY advice to those about to cook rice pudding is this: open a tin of Ambrosia instead," says Mrs. Margot Burbidge, who writes cookery features and, before her marriage, taught at the Cordon Bleu cookery school.

"However good a cook you are," she says, "you can never be sure how home-made rice puddings will turn out. But Ambrosia is perfect every time - rich, creamy, and perfectly cooked."

Ambrosia's creamy secret

What makes Ambrosia so extra specially creamy? It's made with full-cream milk from Devon. "Try it topped with jam, honey or fruit," suggests Mrs. Burbidge. Try it soon, too!

Mrs. Burbidge likes that full-cream Devon milk taste. "Ambrosia is perfect every time," she says.

Sally loves Ambrosia

Toby asks for more

Ambrosia

CREAMED RICE

Try these other delicious Ambrosia Milk Puddings:
CREAMED SAGO · CREAMED BARLEY
MACARONI · CREAMED SEMOLINA

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES

THE END OF THE DAY

● This is the tigress which the Earl of Home missed with four shots...

It was eventually killed by the Duke of Edinburgh's treasurer, Rear Admiral Christopher Bonham Carter, after it had fought for two hours to break out of the ring of hunters. Now the dead tigress is carried off on an elephant.

JUNGLE DEATH

● TRAPPED... Part of the which penned in the tigress in a

● RINGSIDE SEAT for the Q shirt. An umbrella-boy is head from the

DEATH TRAP

DAILY MIRROR, Friday, March 3, 1947

PAGE 15

● TRAPPED . . . Part of the ring of 327 elephants, and the moveable canvas screens, which penned in the tigress (and rhino) shot by members of the royal hunting party in a jungle in Nepal last Monday.

● RINGSIDE SEAT for the Queen, in slacks and bush shirt. An umbrella-boy is there to shade her bare head from the hot sun.

● SPECTATOR . . . The Duke looks on. His inflamed trigger finger stopped him shooting.

● ON TARGET . . . but the Queen shoots only with a movie camera. The Queen and the Duke are now in Teheran, guests of the Shah and Queen of Persia.